REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS
THE NATIONAL PARK FOUNDATION’S
Inclusive Storytelling Grant Opportunity

Grant Applications Due: Wednesday July 27, 2022

The National Park Service (NPS) and the National Park Foundation (NPF) are excited to announce a request for proposals in support of Inclusive Storytelling. This grant opportunity is funded by the National Park Foundation.

As part of the emerging Deferred Storytelling Initiative and spurred by our vision for America 250, the goal of the Inclusive Storytelling Grant is to support projects that help the National Park Service share more inclusive and comprehensive narratives. Indigenous people, women, people of color, people with disabilities, communities striving for environmental justice, and other under-represented people have shaped America, the National Park Service, and specific parks and programs. Too often, however, these people have been excluded or muted due to systemic injustice, colonization, oppression, and discrimination. This grant supports your work to document, preserve, and share through various interpretive products and services, the voices and actions of people who are not often recognized as having shaped our history, or for whom the struggle for social, racial, and environmental justice continues. We recognize the term storytelling has several meanings. For the purpose of this grant opportunity, “storytelling” is used to describe the art and craft of interpretation, the art of organizing and sharing a story not the technique of storytelling.

This grant will also support the work to document, interpret, and share stories about communities that have been historically excluded from participation in the outdoors – either through a community’s physical presence on public lands (e.g. segregation, forced removal, lack of accessible accommodations, environmental racism) or through the narrative of who belongs in the outdoors. Also consider submitting a proposal if your work strives to document or interpret stories that eliminate barriers, promote access, and cultivate connections to the many benefits of spending time outside, in cultural and historical spaces or to promote identification with parks as a beneficial element in society.

Transforming contemporary research into relevant interpretative products requires capacity to decipher fresh scholarship and deploy it in engaging, accurate and succinct ways that may underpin interpretive programs, websites, videos, updated Visitor Center and Wayside exhibits, among many other products. Consider how this grant can help strengthen your team’s ability to more fully engage in the process of building inclusive storytelling and lead to needed fresh products or services.

A. Overview

The National Park Foundation is providing grants that increase the ability of parks to deliver inclusive, accurate, and underrepresented stories. Grants can be used to help launch a new idea, pilot an outreach approach to deliver authentic inclusivity, focus on an area of importance to your park such as Indigenous perspectives, gender equity, LGBTQ rights or immigrant rights movements, or provide resources for interpreters to examine the process of transforming historical research into contemporary, relevant interpretation which is accessible and compelling for the intended audience. Grants can also help finish an incomplete project that is a priority for your park or help correct an intersectional story or history that is inaccurate, biased, or offensive.

Inclusive storytelling is predicated on research, documentation and material culture upon which stories are based. A portion of your grant request can be used to support digital documentation or conservation of objects/materials necessary to anchor stories and provide context, so long as part of the final product is public-facing, compliant and accessible. Creation of oral histories, podcasts, blogs, web content and other media are supported by this grant.

Partner organizations reflective of the communities you seek to expand inclusive storytelling with will also be supported through this grant, based on their role in implementing the project.

Successful projects will result in tangible products or services, even if those products or services are of a pilot nature. Projects that are purely research, collections acquisition or digitization without a public facing component will not be considered.

B. Project Examples

- New media, including Oral History documentation, films and videos, podcasts, mobile app and web content, waysides, publications, and other public communication that share fresh interpretation to counterbalance racism in history, culture, science, and society. Example: The Big Lockup: Mass Incarceration in the U.S. Golden Gate National Recreation Area

- Revise/updated interpretive media that contains an outdated, incomplete, inaccurate, biased, or offensive story or language. This could include assessing and reducing a dominate narrative with a wayside group or exhibit to provide space for an underrepresented narrative. Example: History Under Construction Muir Woods National Monument or Mission House Wayside Whitman Mission National Historic Site

- Fund a current furlough period of a full performance interpretive park ranger and assign them to produce an interpretive product or service that meets the criteria for this grant proposal. Example: New Exhibit on Segregation Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Military Park

- Hire two seasonal park rangers to cover daily operations to free up a full performance park ranger to conduct a landscape analysis of your interpretive media to identify dominate narratives and identify gaps in storylines.

- Fund interns from communities you seek to include and engage with, to research and document Indigenous perspectives, contemporary views of people of color, disability, or women’s history and other narratives to help build inclusive storytelling. Public-facing product even if prototype, required.

- Pilot/seed funding for a larger project (i.e. demonstrate viability of a new approach or idea), fund the completion of an existing project.

- Documentation/conservation of objects associated with the cultural histories you aim to interpret. Public-facing product, even if prototype, required.

C. Program Criteria

While NPF understands and respects that Inclusive Storytelling grants will take many different forms, funding will be prioritized for projects that exemplify a strong commitment to the four A250 focus areas: 1) Advance Equality and Justice for All, 2) Acknowledge and Honor Indigenous Peoples, 3) Acknowledge and Honor People of African Descent, and 4) Acknowledge and Honor the Contributions of Women.

4. Funding will support project activities between August 2022-December 2023.
5. Final reports will be due January, 2024, an extension is possible.
