SAN FRANCISCO, CA

Randi Fisher is a philanthropist and social entrepreneur focused on the nexus of the environment, health and sustainability. She is co-founder and trustee of the Pisces Foundation in San Francisco.

The Foundation’s vision, “people and nature thriving together,” reflects Randi’s belief that awareness of the interconnectedness between people and nature is critical to our collective future. Randi is involved in the full range of the Foundation’s work with an emphasis on its environmental literacy program, which seeks to prepare the next generation to make sound, sustainable decisions about health and the environment.

In addition to her work at the Foundation, Randi serves in leadership positions at a range of nonprofit organizations focused on environmental stewardship and human well-being. Currently, she is a trustee of the Golden Gate National Parks Conservancy, where she helped found the Institute at the Golden Gate and is a leader in the Tunnel Top Park Campaign – a new 13 acre parkland in the Presidio which encompasses a learning landscape for kids and families. Randi provides strategic advice to the FOR-SITE Foundation dedicated to the idea that art can inspire fresh thinking and important dialog about the environment. She is a founding board member of Education Outside, a San Francisco nonprofit committed to advancing science outdoors, and she is also a co-founder and advisory council member of Ten Strands, which connects education, the environment, and community in California.

Previously, Randi played a central role in founding Blue Sky Funders Forum, designed to build the environmental education field; provided critical early support to ChangeScale, a collaborative of leading Bay Area science and education organizations; and served as a trustee of the California Academy of Sciences, where the Foundation’s support is catalyzing a global environmental literacy initiative. Earlier in her career, Randi played a key role in developing the Bay Area Discovery Museum, a children’s museum providing arts, technology, and environmental education programs, and encouraged youth development through her involvement with Summer Search and Breakthrough Collaborative.

Randi is the honored recipient of the 2015 Excellence in Philanthropy award from the North American Association of Environmental Education and the 2015 Outstanding Philanthropy award from the Association of Fundraising Professionals, along with her husband and Pisces Foundation trustee, Bob.
